Rod Ziemer Lecture on April 14, 2004

"Experience with Decoupling Agricultural Support" is the title of the upcoming Rod Ziemer Lecture on April 14, 2004. The lecture will be presented at the Georgia Center for Continuing Education by Dr. John Baffes, a Senior Economist in the Development Prospects Group, The World Bank. He monitors global commodity markets, analyzing agricultural policy reforms. The presentation will review the experience with decoupling government support for agriculture from production decisions in the European Union (1992), Mexico (1994), U.S. (1996) and Turkey (2001). Dr. Baffes will also discuss a number of one time buyouts, including the U.S. peanut program. Dr.

Baffes received a B.S. in Economics from the University of Athens, Greece in 1981, an M.S. in Agricultural Economics from UGA in 1986 and a Ph.D. in Agricultural and Resource Economics from the University of Maryland in 1992.

Career Opportunities Webpage

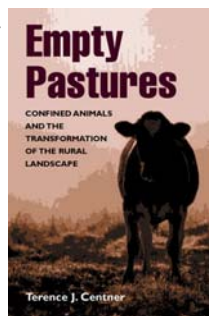

A new "Career Opportunities" webpage has been developed for Agricultural and Applied Economics. It can be reached from a link on the department's homepage. <<http://www.agecon.uga.edu/>>. This is a dynamic page that changes each time it is accessed with a new alum at the top of the page giving some advise to students. Information is categorized for agricultural economics, agribusiness, and environmental economics for undergraduate majors and minors and graduate degrees. Job openings and internship opportunities are described. Our alumni directory can be accessed from this webpage, and various employment search engines are linked to this webpage. If you are aware of relevant job openings or internship opportunities, please send them to aaecon@agecon.uga.edu.

Faculty Recognition

Dr. Jeff Dorfman was selected by the Southern Agricultural Economics Association (SAEA) to receive the 2004 SAEA Distinguished Award for Teaching of a Course in recognition of his teaching AAEC 4760 – The Economics of Agricultural Processing and Marketing. The course helps prepare students to work in a wide array of food industry jobs. Students are prepared to solve economic and management problems that will likely face them while working in the food industry.

Professor Terry Centner has authored a new book entitled Empty Pastures: Confined Animals and the Transformation of the Rural Landscape which is published by the University of Illinois Press. The book probes the extraordinary, worrisome changes that are taking place in our rural landscapes. Dwindling numbers of livestock in the American countryside are a symptom of a broader transformation, one with serious consequences for soils, waters, food, small towns, and inhabitants.

Staff Recognition

Laura Alfonso, the department's librarian, illustrated Professor Centner's book, Empty Pastures. There is a link to view Laura's illustrations on the department's March/April website.

Video of Department's 75-Year History

The CAES Office of Communications has developed an interesting video of the 75-year history of Agricultural and Applied Economics at the University of Georgia. Interviews with alumni, students and faculty are included in the video, as well as historical information. Some highlights from the past include interviews with Tom Frazier, Wen Williams, Steve Brannen, Evan Brown, Dale Carley and Anne Firor Scott. The department has experienced tremendous growth and changes over the decades. You can order the video in VHS ($15 donation) or DVD ($20 donation) from the department.

Development Opportunities

As the Department of Agricultural and Applied Economics advances, our mission to provide students with the best economics education possible is even more critical and we cannot do it alone. For our department to continue as a premiere leader in agricultural and applied economics, we need your help to address our funding priorities. To this end, the department announces four new development opportunities: the Tom Frazier Scholarship Fund, the Wen Williams Scholarship Fund, the Evan Brown International Study Fund and the Stephen Brannen Leadership Fund.

Please consider an investment in one of these funds. Your donation to the department is an investment in the present as well as the future. In the words of one of our most distinguished alumni, J.W. Fanning: "The greatest use of life is to invest in something that will outlast it." A donation to our department will allow you to invest in an institution whose mission is to continue to bring high quality agricultural and applied economics education to everyone who wants it.

Thank you in advance for your consideration. On behalf of the Department of Agricultural and Applied Economics, we are most grateful.
